Note: Interestingly this safe-schools crosswalk does not even have a stop-sign!

There were about 7 cars approaching in each lane (~14 in total) in a fairly tight formation.

The lead cars in each lane were about about 40 yards away as I stood at the the spot marked above, hoping for one of the cars to show a sign of slowing down.

I was in plain sight. Dog at my side. None of these cars yielded, they just speed through the yellow-school crosswalk.

First one, then another and another.

Finally after the 4th cars in each lane speed passed me at 35-40mph I started waiving my hands over my head to get the oncoming cars attention but they just kept blowing through the crosswalk.

As you well know we are an affluent community.

We have a disproportionate and increasing number of sports cars, 300+ HP SUVs, ultra-quick electric vehicles (think Tesla), crowded and sometimes very narrow streets and stressed out residents (see Beach Cities health District study) rushing to work or to drop their kids off at school.

Add into the mix the illegal truck route on 27th and you have a formula for disaster.

Captain McKinnon, speaking frankly, you and I know the residents of NW Hermosa got little more than lip-service related to enforcing the direct-route laws for all the overweight commercial trucks using 27th to access Plaza Area businesses. Never a ticket issued.

I don't want to see that mistake repeated.

What I want to know is how many "failure to yield" (CVC 21950 etc) tickets has the HBPD issued in NW Hermosa over the the past 5 years AND how many failure warnings have been issued?

I want to understand what steps the city is taking to get ahead of the curve and mitigate this increasingly dangerous situation.

Just two days ago a SUV Cadillac driver never even saw me in the intersection at 22nd and Hermosa and blew past me. Unlike the so-called safe-schools intersection at 25th and Hermosa pictured above this intersection had a stop sign!!!

How many failure to yield tickets have been issued in NW Hermosa over the past 5 years? I'm sure there are many violations every day.

How many failure to yield Warnings?

What's the Plan to reduce the danger?

Thank You,
Anthony Higgins

PS: if additional police resources cannot be allocated because they have other duties, then at least can you recommend increasing the fees on the parking meters or parking permits or something else to cover the additional police resources needed.

It's a real and increasingly dangerous situation Captain McKinnon.
